FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

February is traditionally marked by full-year earnings reports, and this year it was also affected by the fresh outbreak of inflationary pressures in the US. Over the past few months, full-employment has led to growing pressures on low wages. The sharp rise in US rates (10-year up +45bp to 2.85%) resulting from these pressures, has significantly affected equity indices, particularly in emerging markets (Chinese HSCEI -8.2%) and even Europe (Eurostoxx -6.4%). Despite its overexposure to these markets, your World Winners fund delivered an outperformance of +40bp in a market that contracted -3.9%.

The fund has benefited in particular from the excellent earnings reported by Shiseido, one of our core convictions. In 2017, Shiseido, World Winners' second largest investment, delivered outstanding performances, thanks to its manager Mr Uotani, whom we trust since the inception of the fund in 2015. Since the start of the year, its share price is up 18.6% (in yen). In 2017, the world's fifth-largest cosmetics group saw its sales grow +18.2%(!) to 1005 billion yen, with its operating profit climbing +118.7% to 80.4 billion yen. These results are being driven more specifically by the renewed marketing approach, the acceleration of the innovation cycle and the cost reduction programmes rolled out. Shiseido is also benefiting from a trade-up by Chinese consumers, who are huge fans of quality Japanese products, transitioning to the "Prestige" brands.

While Shiseido is still benefiting from a catch-up effect for its brands (and its margins are still well below its international rivals!) after decades of stagnation, this is no longer the case for its main Japanese competitor Kose, which is already extremely well-managed and which we have just sold for valuation reasons following a performance of almost +150% since our initial investment.

Our research efforts and contrarian approach led us to position ourselves on these two high-quality companies at a time when they were overlooked by investors, the latter being focused on their overvalued Korean competitors instead. This approach has paid off significantly for both of these companies (KOSE and SHISEIDO). We therefore continue to monitor our universe closely in such volatile markets, which always offer entry points for World Winners.
